Conflicting stories are told of a very lively little scrimmage, which occurred at Broadway and Twenty-eighth street, resulting in the arrest of that industrious, hard-fight ing gambler, Tom O'Brien, and his arraignment in the Jefferson Market Police Court

Two pretty young women, well known in Capt. Reilly's tenderloin precinct, were the primary cause of the row. They had crossed Broadway under escort of Claude L. Goodwin, jr., Secretary to Hoyt & Thomas, authors of "A Brass Monkey," "A Tin Soldier" and similar farce comedies, when they were met in itont of the Brower House by O'Brien and a friend named Frank. This was about 9 o'clock last Tuesday night.

Frank nudged O'Brien and said: "I know them people. Wait and see some fun,"

Then the following dialogue is alleged to have taken place between Frank and the girls:

"Ah, there, Dolly!"

"Heigho, Frank!"

"Come on; hurry up!" interjected Goodwin. Capt. Reilly's tenderloin precinct, were the "Come on; hurry up!" interjected Goodwin.

"No: I want to see my Frank. Come here, Frank."
Frank walked towards them.
Thereupon Goodwin angrilv demanded:
"Do you know these ladies?"
"Where? What ladies?" chaffed Frank, looking around in sponrent bewilderment.
This was too much for Goodwin, jr. He lifted his heavy cane and brought it down with smashing force on Frank's cranium, inflicting a slight scalp wound from which the blood flowed freely.
The funny man iell on the sidewalk. The girls screamed and dropped on their knees

The funny man fell on the sidewalk. The girls screamed and dropped on their knees beside him. Goodwin was preparing to follow up his advantage when he saw O'Brien coming for him with blood in his eye.

Tommy has the reputation of being a b-a-a-d man.

Therefore Mr. Goodwin thought discretion the better part of valor, and he fled.

So far the story is as told by both parties; but now contradictions arise. Some people say that Goodwin dashed into the barbershop of the Brower House and dropped into the boss's chair, exclaiming: "Save me, save me!"

"You're not next," was the bland! rejoinder.
"Oh, hang it all! I did not say shave. I said save—oh, Lordy! here he is."
Tommy was there with a vengeance, if this account is the true one. He picked up a bottle of bay rum and smashed it on Mr. Good win's skull, cutting the scalp and letting loose a stream of blood that ruined the barber's chair.

ber's chair.

"Slug my friends again, will you?" he asked, but not waiting for an answer hurried out of the shop.

He picked Frank up and carried him home.
O'Brien lives at 347 West Forty-ninth street.
The girls had disappeared.

Mr. Goodwin had his head bandaged and went home to ponder on the best method of getting square with the big, bad gambler, finally deciding to swear out a warrant for his arrest. He went to Jefferson Market Thursday and Justice Duffy granted him the warrant. It was given to Court Officer Gardiner to execute.

Gardiner is old and decrepit, and knew too much to attempt to arrest O'Brien alone. He went to the West Thirtieth street station and left the warrant with Capt. Reilly, who sent Detectives Brett and Haves out for O'Brien last night. They arrested him just after he had purchased tickets at Palmer's Theatre.

O'Brien could not obtain bail, so he went to bed in a cold station-house cell. In court this morning he admitted striking Goodwin, but said he hit him only with his fist, and that the affair took place in the saloon of the Browner House and not in the barber's shop.

"Did you know Goodwin?" he was asked "No. I never met him before," he replied. He refused to give Frauk's last name or the page of the cirl.

He refused to give Frank's last name or the name of the girl.

Goodwin did not appear in court. His brother was there, but did not wish to press the complaint, although he said his brother was so scriously injured that he could not leave his house at 42 West Twenty-sixth street.

"We were all friends. It was only a drunken row," declared O'Brien. "Yes-all friends," assented Goodwin's Rags, and will bless the honest finder who returns him. She said this morning:

"He is very young and his hair is short. Yesterday I was at Stern's, standing by the lift. The noise made by opening the door frightened Rags, and he ran away. I whistled for him, but he did not come, and I ran to find him. He was seen with a lady and then with a gentleman on Sixth avenue. Then all trace of him was lost.

"He is awfully cute. He doesn't know many tricks yet, though he will run and get his collar when he is told. He does not wear it in the house. He is named after a friend of mine who is always dressed in good clothes, but who looks like a ragbag, and whose brother calls him 'Rags.' He gave me the terrier and I brought it from England only six weeks ago. I am sfraid he may be ill greated and Rags is not used to anything like that, dear little chap."

Miss Smith appeared as a young woman with an American face, English accent and a stunning Japanese morning gown. Quite a cosmopolitan ensemble. She will be very grafeful to any one who returns her young lags. No "old rags" fellowness her young lags.

DIAMONDS AND FRANKIE ARE GONE.

The Widow Mills Connects Miss Raymond Mrs. Henry C. Mills, a young widow who lives at 790 Sixth avenue, mourns the less of $3,000 worth of diamonds and $100 in money, and has asked Inspector Byrnes to find and arrest Miss Frankie Raymond on a charge of stealing them.

Miss Frankie is described as a singularly beautiful brunette of twenty-two years, with black hair and eyes, and of medium height.

The Widow Mills says the young woman called on her six weeks ago, with an introduction from a friend, and by her clever talk induced Mrs. Mills to allow her to stay at 790 Sixth avenue. The girl told the widow that she was an actress, and that she was the daughter of a well-known journalist and an equally well-known actress. She went out frequently, stayed away all night and upon returning would always excuse herself by saying she had been filling an engagement as elocutionist. On Tuesday Mrs. Mills told her she would have to leave, and from that time the young woman seemed to be very much excited.

On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Mills entered her bedroom and noticed that her bureau drawer was open. She discovered that her diamond jewelry, consisting of carrings, a bonnet pin, a diamend solitaire finger ring and two diamond cluster rings, valued in all at $3,900, was missing.

During her stay Miss. Mills says the girl

THE RACE FOR CONGRESS.

Bold Tammany Makes Three Nominations Ahend of the Counties.

The County Democracy leaders are angry because Tammany Hall made three nominations for Congress last evening. They think the Wigwam should have adjourned all its conventions until a union had been perfected

in the close districts

in the close districts.

The Wigwam leaders reply that there is only need of harmony in the districts which the Republicans are likely to win if two Democrats are in the field.

The Congressional nominations made by Tammany Hall last evening were as follows:
Sixth District—Frank T. Fitzgerald.
Ninth District—S. S. Cox.
Thirteenth District—Ashbel P. Fitch.
Frank T. Fitzgerald is a young lawyer and the son of the late ex-Alderman James Fitzgerald. He is very popular among the labor people of the district. Last year he ran for Civil Justice against Michael Norton. The district is now represented by Amos J. Cumnings, County Democracy, and comprises the First, Fifth and Ninth Assembly districts.

prevent it. Mr. Cox's district comprises the Tenth. Twelfth and Fourteenth Assembly districts.

The County Democracy will be compelled to indorse Mr. Cox's nommation.

The nomination of Ashbel P. Fitch by Tanmany Hall in the Thirteenth District was a stroke of policy. He was elected two years ago as a Republican, but he voted for the Mills bill and has since then declared for Cleveland and Thurman and thriff Reform. Mr. Fitch is the legal adviser of the brewers and it is not likely that the brewers will do anything to injure the Tammany Hall County ticket.

Tammany Hall will not nominate or indorse Timothy J. Campbell for Congress, although his friends have worked hard for a union upon Campbell. The Wigwamites claim that if he had the union nomination he would have plenty of time to work for the County Democracy County ticket. If he runs on the single County Democracy ticket for Congress he will be kept binsy looking after his own fences, especially in the Seventh Ward.

Jury, but instead of doing either he imposed a fine of $20 and costs.

George Hoffman, who was with Kramer, paid the fine, although he knew the transaction was illegal. Then he went to the District-Attorney's office, and acting on the advice received there, will place the matter before the Grand Jury Monday afternoon, Seymour will probably be indicted, and if so his trial will cause a sensation. He is prominently connected in Hoboken. The Harlem Democratic Club will have a meeting to-night at which Mayor Hewitt's brother.

The river reined up, jumped from his seat, and seizing a brick, tarew it with full force at little Noble. The missies struck the child's face, cutting a terrible gash and rendering him insensible. The police are looking for the driver.

The Tammany Hall members of the Club will probably not oppose Mr. Hewitt's election as a member, but they will object to his indorsement for Mayor.
